Attached please find the revised manuscript of Victims of Delusion. I have changed it in light of our December meeting, and your suggestions and comments. I have also added two short chapters, which are clearly marked, and which do not, I believe, present much challenge in the sources-methods areas. I have written a note to you in the front of the manuscript, describing the "key," as it were, of fonts and colors, so that you will be able easily to see what is new text, accepted redactions, challenged redactions, alternate text, substantiating notes, and so on.

As we have said to one another, we are very close to full agreement. I am confident that this will be our last significant iteration. Subsequent changes I anticipate will be minor revisions.

I waited to send you this until after the holidays. But, I am anxious to get this to an agent and publishers now. I believe your review should not take very long this time. We have discussed the outstanding issues; I have tried to respond to your concerns; I have made clear my reasons for those points where I have reworded, or continue to disagree. All these points are, relative to what we have already done and agreed upon, relatively minor.

I look forward to hearing from you soonest.

Many thanks for your collaboration.

Sincerely,
